THE TASMANIAN DEVIL.

An old Australian colonist, whose hunting experience and observations entitle him to be noticed also as a maturalist of merit, has given in a late foreign magazine a very interesting and graphic, though somewhat inelegant sketch of a singular quanty personal in prints as the "Ursian Sarcophilus," or "Texas Diabolus" of Gray, but now better known in its native haunts by the energetic solbriquet of "The Tasmanian Devil." It is however, no longer in Australia proper, though still common enough in the remoter backwoods of Van Dieman's Land, and has in inco-past been called at binary of the man, the grizzly badger, and sometimes even the Australian badger. It certainly cannot be according to the contribution of the mane of Breeboors, who and has in times past been called at linear arch the Taxamanian boar-wolf, the pickal durant, the grizzly badger, and sometimes even the Australian badger. It certainly cannot be a very pretty creature, as the following description will show:

"The Taxamanian Devil is a beast about the size of a large buildog, in appearance something between a polecat and a bear, but in kind a poucher, like the opposum or kangaroo. There are devils in nature of many kinds and characters. The wild extend the thin company, or kangaroo. There are devils in nature of many kinds and characters. The wild extend the land strewn expressly in the devil proper, or, as they called him formerly in the blue report books, the rober face to face. A preceive mobiling, but per the Lattin name of devil to the whole the land with the call him devil, his ame in French is diable, and in German tuefel, and I am told the Royal Society has given the Lattin name of devil to the whole the landiar harmore's head what he decisive blow. The next.

"His natural propensities are those of the Lann many race.

"His natural prepensities are those of thingself on the gluttonous or stuggish kind, and he and remember will be quiet enough when gorged with delained bett to undisturbed repose, but side, and the control of t will be quiet enough when gergen with clash, and let to undisturbed repose, but side, and on the other a vet the slightest provocation, the necreat and most unintentional observation will turn him at once into a veritable fleud. He somer struck than the devil then becomes instantly the very type of senseless from, and flying with equal flerceness at a mastiff or a harn-door. Nor in there, whilst this is left to him, either mind, had let bose the dog, in with violence to the ground flesh remains to tear, or a last bone to shatter, he fights on regardless of the numbers that surround him, or of his own subsiding strength, until at length is juws snap faintly, and his life goes gradually out with un informal sener.

"Though taken young and brought up in captivity, his mature undergoes not the slightest modification. He lives to the slightest modification. Ile lives to the slightest modification.

"Though taken not be in captivity, his nature undergoes not the sightest randification. He lives to the last the same sarly life, and usually dies in some and struggle with the bars of his cage. After years of experience he repeats the same acts of proliticss and exhausting freuzy. Without apparent motive he rushes at the wall, beating the air like a rabid hunting utdering long growls that seem to choke him, till they break out suddenly into a piercing bark. He shows not the smallest attachment to his guardians or feeders, whom he memaces and swears at from the moment they approach him till they pass completely out of sight. When fired out or overfed he becomes stapid and sleepy, rolls himself up into a corner, and falls into a leaden similar from which it is not always cany to rouse him. Nothing can be
