Oliver Dyer, who has remarkable opportunities for observation in the city of New York, says in the January number of Packard's Monthly, 1870.

Before closing the article, I wish to mention what seems to me to be a general fallacy; to wit, that lager bere is an utterly annual soft of the working and that the substitution of it for whisky is a great gain. So are as my observation goes, I am satisfied that a German with his brain racked to stolkliby in flager beer is as great a brute as an Irishman with his brain school fallow, the control of the work of the wind of the work of the wind of the work of the wind of the work of the work of the wind of the work of the w us of more incbrinting liquors. Instead of that, however, it is now conceded almost universally by the English press, that the "heer-shop system" has been the greatest pert to England, and that it has largely increased the consumption of distilled liquors. Hecorder Hill, of Birmigham, one of the highest English authorities that can be quoted on the subject, anys when speaking of the friends of that set:

"Uncering experience has demonstrated the fallowy of their expectations. Malt liquor is no hetter than it was formerly, and the sale of spirits has increased; white on the other hand, the establishment of the beer shop, which was to check these owils, inoperative to that end, has introduced mischiefs of its own; and indeed is universally denounced as a curse upon the land."

A correspondent who dwells on the line of the Eric Railroad sends the two paragraphs that follow:

Turning to the lad with an expression of countenance calculated to impress him with the enormity of the offence, the colonel solemuly and slowly said:

"My son, I never play cards; I am a member of the church."

"Oh!" exclaimed the disgusted urchin, "I thought you was a member of the Legislature."

There's something pleasant as well as commondable in the following verses, which were upwards of sixty years ago inscribed on a beer-jug:

Come, my old friend, and take a pot,
But mark me what I say:

"Whilst thou drink'st thy neighbor's health, harge of his cilitorial duties was half a quinca per week. And William Hazlitt, no of the finest critics in English litera-ure eighty years ago, only received five hillings per column, small type, from the soudon papers for which he then wrote. The topic is an attractive one, and we ill close with mentioning that Daniel Jefoc, author of "Robinson Crusoe," tarted a weekly newspaper under the lite of Review of the Affairs of State. In his he published a postical satire entitled "The True-horn Englishman," the open-ug lines of which are:
