ALL OUR DILS GURDARFIELD OF HISTORY PROCEEDINGS OF THE STATE OF THE ST

mas time when the genial Thackeray was found dead in his bed—that a wedding was about to take place in St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, Loudon. John's Church, Waterloo Road, Loudon, On the eve of this event the family were emprised by a strange, finthering noise at the parlor window; and on proceeding to ascertain the cause, it was discovered that a pigeon had entered the room. It was a fine bird, and did not seem at all frightened by the number of a trange faces that were gozing upon it. Suddenly it walked from the apartment and hopped down the kitchen stairs, where, with the ulmost sano runch, it passed by the favorite old black cat, and proceeded to calolish itself upon the kitchen muttel-piece.

dren present, and the cook was busily engaged in preparing for the morrow's bridal feast. But the strange visitor paid no heed to either cook or children; ad more astonishing still, the cut did not make suy attempt to resent the in trasion. The children were, of course delighted, and suggested that "the pothing was hungry;" and the next instant all kinds of delicacies were brought forth and placed before the welcome guest. It eagerly partook of them, and after an hour or two had passed away, it got so used to the inmates of the house that it cortainly ate out of their hands.

"cortainly ate out of their hands.
On the following morning—the wolding morn—the pigeon was missed;
and on seeking for it, it was discovered standing on the steps of the door leading to the yard. In the yard itself there were three strange ents watching every movement of the bird, and evidently seeking an operaturity, handers when were three strange arts watching every movement of the bird, and evidently seeking an opportunity to pounce upon it. Here was an awkward different, the worlding preparations, all were as in the worlding and impossibility in the eyes of the welding guests, the difficulty was solved in an unexpected and thoroughly novel manner. As the data in question were posing themselves for the death-spring, the foline favority of the household suddenly duried forthrom the kitchen window and dispersed the eneary, who flew howling over the wall into the churchyard. The resecond great then returned to its necessioned place in the sitchen, where it remained for several days after the welding, and disappeared on the morning when the pide's mother, who had come from Portugal to be present at her daughter's marriage, also took her departure. No trace of the bird was ever found afterwards, nor did it even revisit the scene from that day to this. wards, nor did it even revisit the scen-

from that day to this.

It was suggested at the time by a believer in the doctrine of transmigration. llover in the doctrine of transmigration, that the bird was really the spirit of the mother of the bridgeroom, who had died in the same house about two years previously; but without going so far as this, we may observe that it was a very remarkable and notoworthy occurrence; while it should be stated with reference while it should be stated with reference while it should be stated with reference to the above mentioned theory, and as a antione fact, that the mother of the bridgeroom, when on her death-bad, had actually expressed her regret that take should not live to see his marring, and had caused a room to be closured out and prepared for the recentlenced out and prepared for the recentlency three bridges, who had not then been definitely chosen !
